

City's New Public Works Director Begins Job Here

The City of Sheboygan has a new director of its biggest department — public works — and he apparently started work at a very opportune time.

Robert C. F. Kuhlmann, 41, a native of Sheboygan and a design and project engineer with the State Highway District Office at Green Bay for the past 16 years, was confirmed by the Common Council Monday night for a five-year appointment as public works director.

He'll start at $13,873 annually in the post vacant since Fred W. Wedemeyer's retirement 2½ years ago, and among his duties will be the tackling of the problems that have plagued the operation of the city's five-year-old, $1.2-million municipal incinerator.

Kuhlmann, who holds a bachelor's degree in civil engineering from Purdue University, put in a full day's work here Monday, familiarizing himself with his new duties even though the council didn't officially act on his appointment until Monday night.

And what happened Monday? A 25 by 7½ foot section of the ceiling of one of the municipal incinerator's two furnaces collapsed.

Municipal Services Director Ray Ottensmann — the new public works director's immediate superior — told The Press that a Milwaukee firm, Plibrico — began work this morning replacing the refractory block ceiling with a cast ceiling.

The repair job, estimated at $3,500, will hopefully be finished by Thursday, Ottensmann said.

Until then the remaining furnace — which has a rated burn capacity of 124 tons daily — is being operated around the clock in an effort to keep up with the peak refuse loads of this time of the year.

"We're continuing our city refuse pick-ups on schedule, but we are not accepting the private haulers," Ottensmann reported.

gency occurred, apparently, when the hangers holding the ceiling refractory blocks in place broke loose from the incinerator's beams.

Ottensmann — who has handled the duties of public works director in addition to his own as municipal services director for the past 30 months — was, needless to say, quite happy to have Kuhlmann report for work Monday.

Kuhlmann, son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert G. Kuhlmann, 912 S. 14th St., plans to move his wife, the former Christine Jonnes of Sheboygan County, and daughter Karen, 7, to Sheboygan as soon as he can find suitable housing and dispose of his home in Green Bay.
